When one was reported or feared, those on the line of the expected raid fiel precipitately to this nearest point of safety—usually an army post, if it could be reached—there to remain until the danger was over and then probably to return and find buildings berned, all live things-killed or carried away and propulation.

tily dismounted and went to them, his men-erowding around, eager as himself to help. Water was given them and food from his own rations, but when they had eaten the question was what should be done with them? It was impossible to take them along in so hosty a march.

They were too young to have for

They were too young to hunt for food, and if turned loose would become the prey of wolves and coyotes. In the inclosure where they were they were protected. About 12 feet in front of the puppies ran a ditch through which water was flowing, a sight I would recommend it to the suffering dogs.

The captain had several of the heads brought and laid near the dogs—enough to furnish food for many days. Then from a toolhouse near by he and his men took spades and shovels and turned the course

The man who was in hot pursuit of an enemy, whom he would capture and kill if meessary, had paused to do a deed of mercy to two suffering brutes.—M. E. Saffold in Kate Field's Washington.

The man wanted a pension for a wound received in the service, and one day he applied for it—that is to say, he was discovered by a claim agent, and the claim agent took him before an examiner.

"What's this pension for?" asked the examiner. "For wounds received in the examiner. "For wounds received in the service?" "Of course," said the agent, with a "In the line of duty?"

"Certainly."
The examiner looked over the records a "Why," he exclaimed," the record shows this man was shot while running away in the face of the enemy. Do you call that in the line of duty!"

The agent was stumped, but the applicant was ready.

"You but it was," he said. "They was shootin plum at me with intent to kill, and wasn't it my duty to git away if I The case was held for advisement.-De-remark somewhat loudly and in scarcely polite language:

""What does the "hind legs" mean by being fill! His business is to be "hind legs," and if he doesn't turn up tonight he won't have another job in my theater! I rather timidly approached and asked if I could perhaps supply the missing man's place. "Well, young man, if you'll come and be "hind legs" of an elephant, you can; if not, clear out; the pay's 10 bob a week. The outlook was not cheering, but I was too hungry to be proud, so I answered that I had no knowledge of the duties of 'hind legs' but I would do my duties of 'bind legs,' but I would do my best and hoped that a few rehearsals would perfect me. I followed the 'front legs,' who had been a witness of this in terview, and was quickly set to work. First, I had to put on a pair of large, loose, dirty brown looking trousers, with the cardboard feet attached. They were kept ably to return and find buildings barned, all live thingeskilled or carried away and property of every description wantonly destroyed.

In the year 1885 an officer was sent out with a body of troops in pursuit of Geronimo, who had just passed, leaving desolation in his track. One day he came to a beautiful ranch, showing everywhere the ownership and care of people of means. It was entirely descried. Its occupants had fied, not even taking time to close the doors of the low, roomy dwelling. With one solitary exception, there was no appearance of life. Chained to a post were a couple of magnificent greyhound pupples of purest breed. The little creatures lay side by side upon the ground, nearly famished from hunger and thirst, almost too weak to give greeting to what they knew to be the coming of friends and help. The captain has stilly dismounted and went to them, his meeters was for interest and went to them, his meeters was fired and backache, the decidedly unclean condition of the 'skin." end, and, taking into consideration the discomfort of head and backache, the de-cidedly unclean condition of the 'skin,' and the long hours spent in rehearsals and performances, I don't think I ever took a more hardly earned 10 shillings

D. W. Burnett is the owner of a piece of through which water was flowing, a sight which had only served to tantalize them, fastened just out of reach of its cooling draft. Across the ditch pisinly in view lay the heads of several shaughtered cattle. In the dry atmosphere of that latitude meat does not decay, so the heads were in good preservation and must have added greatly to the flerce pangs of hunger of the two dogs. there, for 100 or 200 yards, had never be

The offer was accepted, and Mr. Bur nett was congratulating himself on his bargain and considered the $75 to have come into his possession easily.

He was not long in changing his mind of the ditch for a few yards, so that it ran immediately by the puppies.

After a friendly pat to each grateful dog and a cheery word of encouragement, the captain mounted his lower and the captain mounted his dam was built and a wheel and other ap-paratus put up there, the cost of which was not over $400 or $500.

About three days after it was rumored that the mine was producing $1,500 a day. An investigation disclosed the fact that the heathen had sent away $8,500 worth of dust within a week after they began work. Several thousand dollars' worth of dust was also disposed of in Chinatown and handed over to one of the Chinase.

Hans' Savings as a Legislator A Pennsylvania senator told the other day an anecdote to illustrate the high standard of political morality in the Keystone State. There was an old Dutchman, a farmer, thrifty and prosperous, who had been carefully saving for many years. Finally he was elected to the legislature. If was a resultarly need to the legislature. was a peculiarly profitable session. There were several railroad charters up for consideration. Hans served faithfully, never broke silence, and always voted; and aft-er the legislature had adjourned, surprised bis friends at home by laying the founda-tion of a €10,000 house, while there were rumors of a £20,000 bank deposit. "Have you had a legacy, Hans?" asked a neighbor at last. "Oh, no," was the reply. "I have only been saving."

"But how could you manage to save $30,000 on a three months' salary of $3 a "Ab," responded Hans complacently "that was very easy. You see my wife didn't keep no hired girl last winter."—

Married Good and Strong. A couple called upon a well known jus-tice of the peace in Webster county, W. Va., and desired to be pronounced man and wife. The sturdy old officer of the law, fully cognizant of the important duty be had to perform, discharged it in the following impressive and obviously novel Meat boiled quickly is always hard and tastelies, and it should be remembered that a very large quantity of water takes the goodness out of the meat. A sancepan only sufficiently large to hold the joint easily should be used, and just cover the meat with water. The time for boiling should be from a quarter of an hour to if amounts to each pound of meat, counting from the time the water boils.

Long redingotes, with immense rolled hack collars of fur, are a marked feature by the local part of his great state of West Virginia, which is sometimes called the Switzerland of America, by the hill of half developed corn and groundhes holes that spread out around us; by the how of the each deal will shade the entrance to your first will shade the entrance to your dwelling place; by our hillside pumpkins, whose frost hitten presence reminds one of the melancholy face of his genantmother;
